REGULAR

8. Strategic directions update

An update from the working groups on the four cross-institutional strategies was provided to Senators, summarized as follows. The composition of the working groups is posted on the Strategic Directions website.

Grow Smartly, led by Benoit-Antoine Bacon

- In many ways the most encompassing of all strategic directions, in the sense that we can only grow “smartly” if the other 8 strategic directions are successfully implemented.
- The working group (APPC) has held 2 meetings so far, another scheduled on Monday.

- Outreach activities include online survey asking key questions, public consultation in the Centre for Teaching and Learning, discussion with key groups such as Faculties, Recruitment, Registrar, Facilities, Human Resources, Instructional Technology
- The report is starting to take shape and will be comprised of 3 parts: key principles, recruitment strategies, and new ideas for research niches, programs and units.

Embrace the City, Embrace the World, co-led by Lisa Ostiguy and William Cheaib
(Graham Carr presented Embrace the World on behalf of William Cheaib)

Embrace the City

- Vast consultative process includes initial consultative meeting in October with the working group comprised of people already involved in city-engaged work, ideas cafés held on both campuses, the running of an online questionnaire, seeking additional input at various events, including “Opportunities in the Non-Profit Sector” showcase organized by JMSB and Bring Your Own Lunch events with faculty, working meeting with the working group in November, a public conversation organized by the University of the Streets Café entitled Partnering for Change: How can community-university partnerships succeed?, and a discussion with student Senators this morning.
- The working group has identified 4 priority areas as well as the benefits associated with each area. Those areas are mapping our impact, designing a collaborative city-oriented space, identifying city-engaged learning opportunities, and supporting transformative partnership for the future.

Embrace the World

- Part of a larger process with an objective to establish an internationalization strategy.
- Initial directions are leading international networks, supporting faculty initiatives and promoting Concordia’s participation in international development projects, projecting Concordia as a welcoming place for international scholars, and tapping on Concordia’s strengths and other resources (alumni, friends, etc.).
- A white paper with general recommendations (in parallel with the other cross-institutional strategies working groups) will be presented on January 19, followed by internal consultations in February, integrating feedback and comments in March and bringing the document to Senate and the Board in April.

Double our Research, led by Graham Carr

- So far, the working group held 4 face-to-face meetings, with another meeting scheduled in December and 2 scheduled in January to finalized draft recommendations. A Moodle site has been set up where working group members can exchange ideas and post suggested readings.
- Outreach activities to the community include 2 ideas cafés (one on each campus), 10 meetings (on both campuses) with targeted members the research community (undergraduate students, graduate students and postdoctoral fellows, early career researchers, research unit directors, Deans, Associate Deans and research platform leaders. Approximately 150 individuals have directly participated in face-to-face meetings and approximately 40 electronic comments have been received from the community.

- The scope of activities includes tackling 9 questions posted on the website but also structuring meetings around key questions and themes.

Teach for Tomorrow, led by Catherine Bolton

- Dr. Bolton began work on Phase 2 by reviewing all the documents already created in Phase 1.
- She reached out the community by running a total of 17 focus groups on teaching values, some of which were facilitated by herself and others by members of the University's academic community, by posing 2 basic questions in order to define a broad and useful definition of good teaching.
- Additionally, she also ran 7 focus groups directly on Teach for Tomorrow with the goal of obtaining specific recommendations, again by asking 2 basic questions.
- The engagement and participation by facilitators and participants in those focus groups was amazing, resulting in feedback which was thoughtful, considered, to the point and productive.
- All the input collected from those focus groups needs to be pulled together into a just and coherent strategy that supports professors in their teaching by looking to identify the key kinds of facilitation that faculty need, what important barriers can be broking or lowered and what can be done to ensure that students get the most challenging, transformative learning experiences.

9. Question period

No questions were asked.

10. Other business (Document US-2015-8-D10)

Referring to the letter from Rev. Ellie Hummel, Dr. Shepard reminded Senators of the importance of the Student Emergency and Food Fund and urged them to make donations.

11. Adjournment

The meeting was adjourned at 3:15 p.m.
